Book Brodolom kod Gnalića takes us to the seabed of Gnalić Island at the southern end of the island of Pašman. It is one of the most important Late Renaissance submarine sites in the world, that is, almost forgotten remains of a large merchant ship that sank in the late autumn of 1583. The rescue of these valuable finds began in 1967 when information about the exact location of the shipwreck finally found its way to the expert public.

The book Dva doma on gastarbeiters and their descendants (Transnational Generations) is the result of a fifteen-year long study of qualitative methodology. Both of these aspects make up the exceptional quality of this study. Cultural anthropological methodology provides access to individual stories and family contexts - in other words, access to people.

Based on each of the Ten Commandments, Goran Granic reflects on various aspects, relationships, value systems and practices in contemporary Croatian society. Where are we and where are we going? What are our landmarks and goals? He did not, as the Old Testament books say, sit in the chorus of mockers and did not stand in the ranks of those complaining that it was dark, but rather offered his vision of going out on the road to recovery, and lit a candle along the way.

Brijibanovo kazalište contains more than one hundred short puppet plays (so-called puppet miniatures) written by author Nada Horvat in thirty years. A selection from her popular 1987 collection "I Want to be Brijiban" was added to the plays. The plays range from lyrically intoned dialogues to small parodies, short fairy tales, grotesque, original plays with words that can be inspired by folk motifs.

Kuća is, by tonality, without a doubt the most gloomy novel by Ivica Ivanišević, the first step into the darkness of a charming author of good intentions who has made us accustomed to Mediterranean cheerfulness and wonderful, warm humor. Urban, melancholy, sometimes this novel is alive and up-to-date, because really, doesn't it seem to us all that we've never been worse off?

Nadohvat is the first contemporary literary text that tells the true story of controversial events in our recent history with a clear female voice and a pre-qualitative passage. In a realistic key and with frequent lyrical moments, the novel convincingly portrays the rural life of the Banovina, which the people of that region seek to lead even in the deeply tragic circumstances of World War II. And then[...]

One man, one woman: love, passion, longing. Simply life, a life that begins with a physical craving, almost hungry for another person. He wants her, she wants him. Over the years, over the decades, coming and going to one another, passion becomes love, so friendship. The relationship that started with the meetings turns into a series of breakups. Breaks are in vain, but partings are inevitable. And the difficult question remains: what have we missed? Where, when? For Mani Gotovac it means: in love, therefore, in life.
