Anotation Vendelin Vasilj (1909-1971) is a Herzegovinian Franciscan, double doctor of science, editor, publicist and missionary among emigrated Croats in the USA. His life and work are especially marked by philosophical and social debates on communism with, in addition to Fr. Dominik Barač, the most elaborate philosophical, moral and social critique of communism, which is why the book seeks to approach not only the most important parts of these debates, but also the atmosphere of the time in which the debates took place.

Anotation Right-wing populism, claiming to be dealing with communism, actually seeks to suppress the original liberal beliefs about the principled moral equality of all people regardless of origin and, in the European variant, to reject the achievements of the French Revolution. Ideologically justified and publicly declared discrimination on the basis of class origin, as carried out by communist systems, right-wing populists would replace it with classification on the basis of ethnicity, race and religion.

Anotation Dr. Dubravko Habek's new novel is a dynamic story about a group of Croatian paramedics who, united by the whirlwind of the Great War, share their destiny within a traveling hospital. The main character, Dr. Rudolf Krantz, a young doctor born in Zagreb, skillfully leads a team of his paramedics, most of whom are just trained in wartime circumstances. Crucified between the fronts of East and West, Croatian, Bosnian, Slovenian and the territory of the Kingdom of Serbia, fighting for their own lives as well as the lives of others, the small Krantz group faces a series of different destinies, each of which leaves a mark in their memory. Playing with time and space, fiction, reality and language, The Imperial Crusher is a successfully made treat worthy of reader pleasure.

Anotation Crni katarakt (Black Cataract) is the fourth novel by Dora Kinert Bučan, which could be said to be a kind of trilogy with her earlier novels The House of Raffaelli and The Rubber Soul. As in the novel Souls of Rubber, here too the main character is Alma. After a long delay, reflection and hesitation, Alma finally decides to write a book. He forces himself to sit down at the computer, but is unable to spell a single sentence...

Anotation Djeca na daljinu (Children at a distance) is a new collection of stories by Julijana Matanović in which the author, although she writes about literal and metaphorical distances, establishes a very close relationship with life, but also with the readership. Because, the main topic is what we all understand well: family relationships. There is talk of labyrinths of love and jealousy, of the complexity and hardships of marriage, of scattered families, and of inventories in old age. However, it is mostly about children: about the relationship between siblings, about lost and found children, and especially about the neglected ones, either literally or metaphorically.

A great success of the Croatian writer, publicist, translator and film producer. The satirical novel, written in 1937, is the story of a poor Jew, Moric Schwartz, a young New York clerk who struggles in debt and can barely make ends meet. A change in such a life will bring him a sudden legacy and a trip to Germany, where he sees an opportunity to realize his great life plans and dreams. In addition to dealing with the theme of opportunism, Judaism and fascism, the novel's story mirrors the picture of the life of the American poor and draws a parallel with the same life of Europe's poor and homeless, or misery that is the same all over the world.

The collection of satirical stories Fiumanski, opet lažeš (Fiumanski, you are lying again) follows the adventures of the tabloid journalist Livi Fiumanski on the way from the social edge to fame and prosperity. If we happen to live in an ideal world or come on, one should not be too ambitious, at least in a world where there are rules and elementary logic, Fiumanski would be an unusual character, almost a caricature, but in our reality it is not difficult to imagine such a character.

The novel by Elvis Bošnjaka Gdje je nestao Kir (Where Kir Disappeared) consists of two narrative lines that alternately follow the victim and the killer. Portraying and contrasting two completely different characters, their missions and logics, and sketching characters from their immediate surroundings, the author recounts the time of the beginning of the war in Slavonia, and encourages everyone to ask what actually happened, because meanings elude, until today, although there is no doubt that the ambush murder, especially of the police chief on duty, is a well-organized crime.

Popović's new novel is imbued with autobiographical facts and fiction, micro-essayistic thoughts and poetic dreams. The story follows a sixty-year-old man who, after a family and professional breakdown and a serious illness, relentlessly re-examines his life so far. He begins to realize that he did not understand himself or others, that he did not really know who he was and what he wanted, he realized that his scale of values was distorted, that important and worthless things were important and valuable to him, that he passively indulged in social customs and models. questioning them at no point.

The book concludes with a discussion by Tomislav Brlek, who views this book as a complete whole, a whole that already at that time hinted at the energy of a writer who does not put an end to it.

The novel by Željko Funda Lepoglava tells about the Ustasha camp there in 1944 and is dedicated to its victims, of whom there were about a thousand. The narrative is composed from different perspectives, those of the omniscient narrator, but also by the confessional voices of each of the multitude of protagonists, many of whom are real historical figures, either perpetrators or victims. These are primarily Ustasha executioners (camp manager omnipotent Ljubo Miloš, his cousin and role model, the infamous Maks Luburić, together with a bunch of insane executioners), then unfortunate camp inmates (among whom Ustasha conspirators Mladen Lorković and Ante Vokić ended up) and prominent Lepoglava citizens (founder of the "Lepoglava lace school" Danica Brössler, pastor Ferdo Krčmar, local painter Gabrijel Horvat and musician Marijan Zuber, illegal Ivan Ferek Srečko...). The novel is also metafictional because the painter Leone Glembay and his imaginary son Eugen, a cunning war profiteer, appear as important characters. And Krleža himself is an episodic character.

Mladenka Gila, called Kostonoga, is a witch and also heals wounds. She practiced healing and herbalism in the 19th century. The novel follows her travels through Dalmatia, Istria and Austria. Fifty-two chapters with six more appendices that make up this "distracted book" of dashed timeline play an unusual story woven of beliefs and superstitions, narrations and fables in the rhythm of an oral ten-part folk song, comic, mocking, grotesque and at the same time melancholy.

O... is a collection of extremely witty stories and sketches, mostly autobiographical, that will make you laugh to your cough, as the author often likes to write in his narration. The author's style of writing unpredictable humorous stories and lines is so premature, unexpected and unusually witty that when I read it, I returned to the sentences I read every now and then. Behind the author's humorous narration is evidently an exceptional talent that is easily recognizable by the extraordinary creation of the atmosphere, by the skill of characterizing most often "small" characters, by original literary games and by the unusual fabled outcomes of everyday actions. All of the above forces me to classify this book as one of those rare books that I deliberately delayed reading in order to make reading last longer. ...

On September 30, 1944, during the village festival of St. Jerome in his native village of Muntić, the main hero's crusade begins. The relentless history of the war interrupts his childhood and he is forced to grow up in a wild time from which adults are looking for a way out, even into childhood. From his native village he goes to school in Pula, where he experiences the entry of partisans, when the war machine ruthlessly tears him from his dreams and youth and takes him into his machine. The war machine leaves its heavy traces in a young man who is trying to make up for lost time in Pazin by studying. Although World War II has ended everywhere, it is not yet in Pula, and his war knowledge is still at stake and his nearly lost soul is once again tempted and in danger.

Štajga ili put u maglu is a novel about Croatia today, about a country that young people are leaving, where everything ends like on a blind platform, about people who have to find themselves in order to understand others. About love, to be nurtured like a fragile plant, about a family disappearing. Ivana Šojat wrote a dedication to the railway and the time when the town in the Pannonian plain had a perspective, to people who fell asleep and got stuck in a nightmare, but who have hope that they will wake up from it.

 Anotation Dubravka Ugrešić in her provocative essay Tu nema ničega! (There is nothing there!) on the example of spas - spas - considers life in post-socialist Europe and Croatia. The former topos of bourgeois culture, as a kind of mark of flight into laziness beyond social life, has become in the new historical conditions the most striking metaphor for the devastation of one space and time, from Banija to New York. The essay is accompanied by a photographic series by Davor Konjikušić, who together with the writer visited several spas in Croatia, Slovenia and Bosnia and Herzegovina.

 Anotation The book of essays Život s njima is the anatomy of the late Yugoslav and the first three decades of Croatian reality, in which Nenad Popović sketches a typology of Croatian intellectuals, artists and public figures of politicians, but also mental systems such as religious fundamentalism from the position of autonomous observer and analyst of culture and ideological patterns. , Yugonostalgia or phenomena of mass culture. As in previous books and public interventions, Popović is a pessimistic chronicler of the time that flows, and his essayistic insights are a qualified testimony of a moody, schizophrenic age in which Croatia and Europe are looking for themselves: spiritually, politically, economically.

"Foxes" by director Krsto Papić from 1969 is one of the most successful achievements of the authorial and modernist period of Croatian cinema. The drama set in the rough view of the Dalmatian hinterland, which Papić uses as a metaphor for the impossibility of escaping from the power of power and tradition, was immediately recognized as an extremely successful work, and the film won the Golden Arenas for best film and best direction.

Golik, Krešo. Tko pjeva zlo ne misli (film). Hrvatska kinematografija -- 1970.-1980.
791(497.5) * 791.63Golik, K.
The booklet consists of several filmological essays that valorize and interpret the film from today's perspective or serve as a methodological guide for its interpretation to new generations of viewers, and partly join current confabulations about the fate of Mayer and Golik's characters in later decades. Special contributions are the alphabet of the film, excerpts from critical articles about the film and the script according to which Vinko Brešan recently shot a television series. The booklet is illustrated with archival photographs.
