 Anotation In 15 works of the collection, the hypothesis is questioned that this is just an episode in the history of the Croatian literary language, offering a more modern and systematic view of the language and context of the emergence of Croatian Protestant editions of the 16th century. The book provides a contemporary view of the position of Croatian Protestant editions in Croatian and European philology, their place in the history of the Croatian literary language and the influence of their literary conception on the Croatian counter-reformation, but also more systematically sheds light on the language of Chakavian, Croatian organic dialects and domestic and foreign language templates.

Anotation The years before the First World War were one of those periods that can rightly be considered a turning point in the past of the Croatian people. It was then that the political, national, economic and cultural foundations of the 20th century were laid in crucial events whose echoes resonated for decades to come. (...) And in the political landscape of Dalmatia at that time, a special place belonged to the Croatian Democratic Party, ie the Croatian People's Progressive Party.

UDC 308(497.5)
Anotation A book of essays grouped around major social issues in 2020 in Croatia - epidemics and earthquakes in Zagreb - which are considered in their natural origins, biological and geological, but also in all their influences on politics, culture and everyday life. In the book, Beck provides a variety of historical sources for relevant issues, illuminates them using a variety of theoretical literature, and paints them with a number of current well-chosen examples. The author shows himself as a great erudite, but also as an extremely educated person, a "sponge who misses nothing"

Anotation "The book brings immensely interesting stories of renowned Croatian scientists about why they do scientific work, how they started doing it and what their view of science is. The editors and authors of the concept of the book managed to motivate scientists of different generations, who deal with different branches of science, to tell their life stories. These stories on the one hand show their key scientific achievements, while on the other hand they reveal them as ordinary, but above all interesting people.

Anotation This book will not leave anyone indifferent, and will be especially interesting to linguists and historians, as well as shipbuilders, sailors and sailors.
The book explains why Croats, although an old maritime people, still struggle with their standard maritime terminology and why they do not have a generally accepted maritime dictionary.
Myths and legends have been exposed that, when it comes to maritime vocabulary, blur the sea. The book also talks about the great misconception quite widespread on our coast - that the standard Croatian maritime terminology was created by people from the mainland. On the contrary, it was created by people from the sea.

Babanija is a world, a name that distracts from the known to the unknown - written by completely familiar, sometimes obscurely close people, spaces, conversations. In Babanija, Banija is possible, but at the same time it is quite impossible. Unreal, fictional, imaginary, and then again so bitterly real, fragile with its misfortune, shaken by galgen humor. Babanija is something that takes away from the historical-political categorization, it is the disobedient people at the crossroads between autofiction and fiction.

Hrvatske narodne pripovijetke (Croatian folk tales) selected by Neli Mindoljević with illustrations by Klasja Habjan ... The stories in this book come from Croatian oral folk literature. They are made up of fairy tales, legends, anecdotes and fables. They are retold in modern literary language from the original languages and dialects, and some have only been linguistically refined to be appropriate and understandable to children.

Marina Gudelj's first novel, Nedovršena (Unfinished), begins with the sentences: "I was born where there is a lot of snow, the middle child of now divorced, to death quarreling parents. It's just that I'm not. " It is a novel that deals with infrastructural, not fashionable, issues of identity, the role of memory, but also the status of fiction, which combines the drama of the main character and intriguing philosophical questions about the criteria of existence.

Dinko Kreho, with his first collection of stories Odmor od kulture (A Break from Culture), where cyborgs and giant robots, people disguised as unicorns, game consoles for transfer to another dimension and all sorts of other fantastic phenomena parade through fourteen slipstream stories. What happens when a monumental heritage gets its own will? Can emptiness be more permanent than someone's presence? In a masterful blend of the "trivial" and the "sophisticated," Dinko Kreho ponders the problems and possibilities of transhumanism, alternative ways of producing energy, and the boundary between art and reality.

The new novel by the esteemed and award-winning Croatian writer Gordana Nuhanović, The Institute of Apathy, is an exceptionally successful combination of a dystopian genre and first-order socio-political satire. At the heart of the action is the outbreak of apathy in the eastern parts of Croatia, the so-called passive ends. The official institutions of the state are establishing an institute that should scientifically and therapeutically respond to this massive socio-medical crisis caused by decades of political negligence.
The author masterfully uses humor and grotesque to point out all the absurdity of domestic reality that brings individuals condemned to the "impossibility of action" to the brink.

Printed as a luxury set of two high-quality large-format notebooks and packed in a convenient box (the first volume of 493 pages and the second of 413 pages). The monograph is available as a Croatian and English edition. The two volumes of Jadran Lazić's photomonography include an opus created in fifty years of intensive, dynamic, creative, propulsive and persistent work in the field and recording of all those actors, politicians, singers, writers, football players, basketball players, starlets and others whose lives are their activities in public. and their characters gained mass popularity through world magazines which, among other things, published photographs of Jadran Lazić
 From a paparazzi, Lazić quickly grew into a professional photographer to whom everyone was happy to pose. Since 1974, Jadran Lazić has been at the very top of photographers and photo reporters of important events and celebrities. His photos are published by elite magazines such as the Times, Newsweek, Paris Match, Hello, Gala, Stern, People and Style. He even won the Newsweek title Photos of the Year twice, the dream of every photographer (Brezhnev on stage and Palestinian liberation leader)! During the 1980s, he became a photographic reporter from the battlefields of Iran and Iraq. After dodging bullets and avoiding death, he decided to head to Hollywood and aim his reliable camera at the stars. He has now confirmed the title of one of the world's best celebrity photographers on over 300 magazine covers entrusted to him. Jadran Lazić's photographs are vivid and sincere and convey the spirit of those portrayed and the atmosphere of their exciting lives (Marlon Brando, Faye Dunaway, Robert de Niro, Richard Gere, Jodie Foster, Jonny Depp and many others) transforming their vivid images,

 Following the history of Croatian sport for more than 120 years, including the last successes of our athletes at the Olympic Games in Tokyo in 2021, the authors bring us answers to these and many other questions. Namely, there is almost no sport in which over the past hundred years there has not been "someone of ours" who tried to rise above other competitors and in the gradation of adjectives big and good, sacrificed many years of work and talent skipped positive and comparative and adorned with superlatives best and greatest.
