 Title (Dis)kontinuiteti ili ponavljanje povijesti
 Impresum Zagreb : Meandarmedia, 2023.
 Description 224 str. ; 20 cm.
 ISBN 9789533343259 : EUR 22,60 US$ 25,10

 Historiography -- Political aspects
 UDC 323.1(497) * 316.347(497) * 316.72:93(497)
 Anotation The book deals with current and acute topics, processes and dilemmas of the Croatian ideological-political and cultural context, where (inevitably) significant aspects and conflicting experiences from the common ex- and post-Yugoslav history are included, as well as numerous examples of mutual cultural contacts and fruitful intersections (first of all, with the Macedonian situation and the so-called Macedonian "question", which is not strange, considering that the author of the book is a prominent Macedonian by his subspecialist vocation).

Author Werhas, Mario
 Title Agresija JNA na Hrvatsku 1991. : planovi, pripreme i provedba
 Impresum Zagreb : Despot Ininitus, 2023.
 Description 212 str. : ilustr. ; 23 cm.
 ISBN 9789533660899 : EUR 23,10 US$ 25,60
 Subject Jugoslavija (1942-1992). Jugoslavenska narodna armija. Domovinski rat (1991.-1995.) -- Jugoslavenske vojne postrojbe
 UDC 355.31(497.1)(091) * 355.48(497.5)
 Anotation Today in Croatian historiography, there are a handful of books and articles (popular, professional and scientific) that deal with various aspects of the Homeland War (military operations, memories of participants, war crimes... etc.), but rarely does any of the above provide an overview of the main events from the decisive 1991. years. This is precisely why the fundamental purpose of this book is to provide a synthesis of the main events through the prism of the Yugoslav People's Army on the one hand, and the Croatian Defense Forces on the other (the basic and special police of the Ministry of the Interior of the Republic of Croatia, the National Guard Corps, and then the Croatian Army and National Protection units).

 Anotation The book analyzes the "foreign policy" of Croatian social democracy during the Balkan wars, i.e. at the time of the most intense relations between Croatian social democrats (V. Korać, V. Bukšeg, J. Demetrović and others) and their comrades from the Balkan countries (D. Tucović, D. Lapčević, D. Blagoev, J. Sakazov and others) before the First World War. The research on relations between socialists was carried out using an innovative methodology and on the basis of unused sources, such as the minutes of the Main Committee of the Social Democratic Party of Croatia and Slavonia, and was placed in the context of discussions on the national question of the South Slavs led by the most relevant European socialist theoreticians (K. Kautsky, H. Wendel, O. Bauer, K. Renner, etc.).

 Anotation Austria-Hungary was also known as the Danube Monarchy because the Danube River, as an important traffic route, connected several countries of the Monarchy to each other, as well as to the Black Sea. The river also served as a border with some less stable neighbors, and during the Turkish presence in the Balkans, the Austrian Empire had a strong Danube flotilla with warships with sails and rudders. In the second half of the 19th century, the construction of the imperial and royal Danube flotillas equipped with steam-powered warships began. During World War I, Austria-Hungary operated ten monitors on the Danube, along with dozens of patrol boats, armed steamers and auxiliary warships. The history and fate of all these vessels are listed here, together with the history of their development,

Anotation Joško Kovačić prepared this capital work, a book in which all the churches in Hvar were treated on the basis of research, archival data and literature, for about thirty years and constantly supplemented the material with new knowledge. The book not only provides church history and art history, but also numerous important information about Hvar's cultural heritage, presenting, for example, the history of the city districts where certain churches are located, or entire smaller settlements developed around them. For the first time, the names of numerous protagonists - clients, builders, artists - are presented, lists of Hvar's bishops and princes are brought, and thus the life of Hvar is brought to life almost plastically.

Anotation The book describes one of the most important events of post-war socialist Yugoslavia - the literacy of the population. The Communist Party of Yugoslavia set an ambitious plan to solve the problem of illiteracy within five years and to direct society and the economy towards a brighter future. Widespread illiteracy was a first-class problem, but also a challenge for the new government, because not a single government managed to solve this problem until the end of the Second World War. The party saw in the removal of this age-old problem a great benefit for its legitimacy, but also a foundation for carrying out the transformation of society and the economy.

The book also contains a comprehensive historical account of the development of Croats and nearby peoples, as well as a detailed description of social, administrative, political and ecclesiastical circumstances in the era when he lived. The book also contains numerous documents that touch on the "eternal" topic of the scientist's ethnicity and nationality, some of which are surprising, and perhaps even shocking.*

Anotation Analyzing the development of literature and art in Zagreb during the First World War, the author explains the continuities and discontinuities between the wartime and the "beautiful epoch" (French: la belle époque) which immediately preceded the war and witnessed significant literary and artistic achievements in Croatia. At the center of the analysis is the articulation of the idea of Yugoslavism among the intellectuals and artists of wartime Zagreb, but also the continuation of the conflict between the "old" and the "young" in literature, which has not yet been clearly observed and exhaustively treated in historiography.

Anotation Promina, a parish of eleven villages, located southwest of Knin in the area between Promina mountain, the Krka river and Miljevac, has not yet been treated onomastically. As this area, which has been continuously inhabited since the Neolithic, was characterized by a large depopulation in the 20th century, it was necessary to start anthroponomastic and toponomastic research so that a large number of anthroponyms would not irreversibly fall into oblivion with the departure of the inhabitants. One of the goals of this work was to record and from an onomastic point of view anthroponyms as linguistic monuments that reflect the material and spiritual culture of that region, which Croatian onomastics have not dealt with so far. Promin speech belongs to the Novoštokavian Ikavian or Western dialect. On the basis of anthroponymy, the main phonological and morphological features of that speech are presented.

Anotation A two-hundred-page work that describes the features of Kastava Čakavica through its morphology, syntax, phonetics and accents, along with examples of short stories that combine the theoretical and practical part of preserving the Kastava language heritage. In addition to a dictionary, maps of the Kastava speaking area, and notes on the history of expression in the Kastav language, "Slovnica" in its eight parts deals with and explores the cultural and historical topic of Kastav, whose speech is also interesting to numerous foreign researchers of Slavic languages and dialects due to its archaic nature. After the dictionary, Dictionary of the Kastav language by Cvjetana Miletić, published in 2019, the Kastav dialect received an adequate grammatical treatment, which is a step forward towards obtaining the status of intangible cultural heritage.

Anotation This book offers texts on the literary Kajkavian language. Introductory, it talks about the standardization processes in the Kajkavian Croatian literary language, its polyfunctionality and with a separate topic related to the name of the language as an identity sign not only for Kajkavian but also for other historical Croatian literary languages. The following is an overview of the written Kajkavian language through the centuries, starting with an introductory text on Hungarian-Croatian lexical contacts. The transition from the 16th to the 19th century shows different themes, authors, and linguistic approaches to their works. In the third unit, dictionaries are presented through the linguistic topic, and grammars through the declension of nouns. And only now could it be the turn of syntactic and syntactic stylistic topics. We hope that readers will see the beauty and flexibility of the language of the old Kajkavian authors, led by Tituš Brezovacki.

Anotation Dvadeset pjesama o ljubavi i smrti (Twenty poems about love and death : and short stories about them) is a personal anthology in which the author chose the poems that, according to his own words, seem to be the strongest, most expressive and most valuable from the almost endless corpus of Western lyrics and translated them into Croatian. The circle of included poets ranges from Sapfa and Katul to Villon and Hölderlin to Trakl and Marina Cvetaeva and a number of poets of the 20th century.
The short stories written by the author for each song are particularly interesting to read. In them, the author's erudition and historical awareness come to the fore, as well as his literary skill, as Matasović imaginatively revives imagined biographical situations from the lives of poets, shows possible circumstances of the creation of poems or develops his own story on a theme from a poetic template.

 Anotation In 1991, five eleven-year-olds, inseparable members of the An group, set out to investigate the mystery of the disappearance of children and some families from their settlement in Borovo, which changes from day to day, and more rapidly, from day to night, in the nights in which they are heard more and more often shots, detonations... However, their friendship is above all, so even the fact that they find out that they suddenly became Serbs or Croats means nothing to them, while it becomes crucial in the world of adults. Listanje kupusa (Leafing through the Cabbage) is one of the first more beautiful, then more painful and tense, and all in all more poignant and humane novels written in recent years. It is a novel for adults and for those who, because of the war, never managed to grow up, or, on the other hand, managed to do so, but truncated, crookedly, without being guilty of it.

Anotation In her new book, Children of Cancer, Nives Opačić decided to take a step forward and wrote a book that, unlike previous books, is not primarily devoted to words and their known and unknown meanings. Of course, there is more in Cancer's children, but this time the favorite linguist paid attention to topics that are close to her personally, such as the intimate meanings of some personal names, her love for music and musicians, walks in Zagreb's neighborhoods, and memories of the old places of her youth and childhood. In this skilfully written and largely autobiographical book, an intimate recapitulation of life's path and incredible knowledge of Zagreb's cultural history are interwoven.

Anotation The painting oeuvre of the Rijeka painter Romolo Venucci can be experienced as the equivalent of the city's political changes in the 20th century. On one side, there are constant changes in state affiliation and government, and on the other, continuous changes in the artistic language. Venucci's oeuvre is consequently stylistically heterogenous. In his earlier works, we can see personal interpretations of historical Cubist, Futurist and Expressionist experiences, which Venucci met during his schooling in Hungary. After the Second World War, he focused on a more conventional statement, becoming close to realism.
