Anotation The memories of Major General Josip Štimac, a former top military pilot of supersonic fighter jets, who participated in the planning, preparation and implementation of all liberation operations of the Croatian Army during the Homeland War, are very precious. If we add to that the general's great role not only in creating but also in designing the doctrine and development of the Croatian Air Force, and especially his persistent post-war struggle to preserve this important branch of the armed forces, which was threatened with extinction, these records become an indispensable contribution to the research of the Homeland War and its development of the Croatian Air Force.

UDC 272-722.7(497.6)
Anotation In the book, the author investigates the early modern Bosnian-Herzegovinian (but also Western European) Catholic culture, concentrating primarily on its internal dimension: on the value system, the system of norms and corrections, ideas of God, the world and the human role in the world, the relationship to the body, the concept of identity and hierarchies.
The author observes the culture of Bosnian Catholics in a double lens: on the one hand, she follows its incorporation into the currents of Western European post-Tridentine church culture, and on the other hand, she questions its peculiarities and the context in which it was created. The published first volume of the study (of the two planned) is primarily concentrated on the first of the mentioned tasks.

Its provisions determined the organization and functioning of the communal government, as well as social relations among the islanders themselves.

This is the third book by Igor Vukić (Zagreb, 1966) on the historical topic (from which, unfortunately, the straitjacket has not yet been torn off) of the prison and labor camp in Jasenovac (and Stara Gradiška) from 1941 to 1945. In the third part of the trilogy, History of numbers about Jasenovac, its author deals almost exclusively with the place that numbers had and have in the architecture of the black myth about Jasenovac. Not only fictional numbers about victims, which dominate Jasenovac, but also real numbers about life on the other side of the camp wall, which are slowly making their way into the light of day.

The study is part of efforts aimed at a better understanding of the medieval nobility in the territory of the Hungarian-Croatian kingdom, especially the understanding of family structures.

Anotation University monograph The right to language by prof. Ph.D. sc. Marko Alerić unites the fundamental rights of every human being - the right to adopt the native language (immanent grammar) and the right to master the native language (normative grammar). The right to the language is an excellent incentive for learning the Croatian standard language, which the author achieves with a reasoned and scientifically based idea that the right to the language is the right of every individual, as well as a member of the wider social community, and not an imposed obligation that forces and binds.

 Anotation The book Parfimirano smeće (Perfumed Trash) by Maša Grdešić explores the relationship between popular and high culture in Croatian literature of the 19th and 20th centuries. In nine chapters divided into three parts, the author shows that it is necessary to approach recent Croatian literature from the perspective of popular culture instead of exclusively from the usual high culture perspective. The author thus deals with popular motifs in the works of canonical writers such as Miroslav Krleža and Ranko Marinković, the political function of popular novels by Marija Jurić Zagorka and the ways in which literature, but also literary theory and history, portray popular genres such as crime and romance and treat passionate female readers of popular literature. – perfumed trash from the title of the book.

 Anotation With her verses, the poet Ana Dević bravely cuts into the melancholy of the past, the vivid colors of girlhood, the inexorability of aging, as well as the many relationships that surround and shape one's own "I". Her poetic language is simultaneous: drinkable, strange, ominous, soft and tremulous, sometimes merciless.

 Anotation How the plates are broken is a collection of poems in which the author deals with relationships in love and family, queer identity and (children's) sexuality. Maslač pays a lot of attention to the body as a place of euphoria and trauma, and says that this body refuses to be constrained by hetero and cis norms. Using humor, references to pop culture, animals and characters from children's literature, Maslač finds a foothold for creating his own vision of gender identity and succeeds in building a multi-layered text that will push the boundaries of our world.

 Franjo Nagulov's new collection of poetry, Krvava knjiga, is a dark record of the decline of a society. The poems can be read separately or as one long poem, a song about a symbolic mother whose child has no prospects for a dignified life due to social circumstances. Leading us through the nightmarish landscape of today's time, the poet gives a pessimistic diagnosis of society: it is afflicted with various diseases, and its recovery is not yet underway.

 Anotation Among the three hundred and sixty-five sentences, there may be the right one, the only one, the most important one, the one around which the other three hundred and sixty-four are just static, but if there are no such sentences, there will be a written trace of an unusually sentence-like year that you have never experienced before.

 Anotation Grobarski pas (Undertaker of Dogs) is a crumbled prose with rough texture and high dramatic charge, a melange of brutal episodes and jovial exhibitions, fatalistic balancing on the edge of quivering exhilaration and menacing melancholy. Balance of triumphs and losses, because above all, Goran Samardžić's new novel is a self-explanatory and self-ironic letter of a defeated enfant terrible

 Description 287 str. ; 20 cm.

 Anotation This is not an (anti)war novel about the downfall of Yugoslavia, about Belgrade in the 90s and the war raging on the territory of the former state, but a novel about a generation. To the generation that saw that the only future that exists for them is the one outside the homeland they knew until then.

 Anotation In the novel Kuća ili Čovjek koji je kupovao čavle (The House or the Man Who Bought Nails), Ludwig Bauer painted a fresco about the last decades of socialism. A novel about two lovers who, driven by their obsessions – home or career – gradually drift apart. The novel shows the reverse side of a socialist system that crumbles in the face of its own ambitions, but above all, it is a story about people - their goodness and naivety, greed and fickleness, about whether we can ever understand each other.

 Anotation The book Maršal na Poljudu is the second prose fiction work of historian and publicist Dragan Markovina, which this time also gains a novelistic momentum - with the taste of the sea and salt, bitterness but also sweetness, the hedonistic one. In a series of stories about the very recent and already somewhat distant past, Marshal na Poljud tells us a lot, and perhaps above all - about the present.

Matija Hedl was a successful scientist, employed in America, who decided to leave this world in the fall of 2018. His father Drago wrote an exceptional book, something between Matija's biography and a diary of 37 days of parental agony, how long it took them to transfer the body to Croatia and place the urn in the family tomb.

 Anotation Nikola Leskovar's novel is a dark and poignant study of human evil, false hope and the smoldering power of love that could redeem us all together. Mjesec sja kroz napukla rebra (The Moon Shines Through Cracked Ribs) is a novel with a difference, beyond fashion and handy easy solutions, far from cheap seduction, any flirtation with the genre or condescension to the reader. Then again, it's also an irresistible special text, pure adventure, a funfair carousel that has broken off and is spinning under the cold moonlight.

 Anotation The collection of stories with the authoritarian title "Moja je zadnja" by the writer and journalist Ivica Ivanišević from Split is in the grip of the authorities, stabbing horns, and as its basic weapon it chooses humor in its most diverse registers. : satire, parody, irony, the absurdity of the socio-political "world around us" or the ubiquitous Dalmatian squeal and teasing.

 Anotation In his new travelogue, Jasen Boko investigates where, how and when Croats came to these areas and reveals a broader picture of human migrations since prehistoric times and civilizations that developed and disappeared. In this book, too, Boko clearly advocates tolerance, proving that the nation is social creation, not genetic heritage, and that we are a mixture of all the populations that lived in this area and passed through here.

 Anotation Lucija Tunković, with her polished style and excellent narrative voice, becomes the author of a generation who brings us all the fears, hopes, happiness and unhappiness of those born in war, who grew up in transition and post-transition, millennials torn between the worlds of their parents and their own, which they fail to build because it is obvious to them are collapsing. Pupčana vrpca (The Umbilical Cord) is a powerful, original piece of prose about the need to break the toxic connection with the past, which is only possible if we truly face it.

 Anotation Rekvijem mirrors the past and the present, because they cannot do without each other. Josip Mlakić wrote a painful diptych about the times of emigration, about the age when even the most persistent cannot survive. Rekvijem is a great and magnificent novel about Bosnia, about a country that is disappearing, but above all a novel about man's attempts to master and overcome himself and his limitations.

 Anotation The novel-mosaic Dictionary of lovers of Konavle by Vlaho Bogišić is made up of glass panes that reflect a world of incredible beauty and life force, but also of heavy weight and tragedy, characteristic of life on the border. Based on the author's great encyclopedic, cultural and personal experience, with a literary shift, this novel space, from antiquity to the present day, is inhabited by famous and less famous heroes. We find them at the same level of narrative reality - because Konavle, as the Dictionary of Konavle lovers clearly shows, is a magical space where everything is possible.

 Anotation Three prophetesses, three women and three destinies that merge into one shocking and moving story are the subject of this short novel by Julijana Matanović. It was told in a time when it was normal for a woman to suffer, when there were no such words as rebellion, choice and rights, and when salvation was hidden only in coffee grounds. Although the voices of women's right to equality echo loudly from all sides, the heroines of Julijana Matanović are still forced to live in a man's world where all attempts at rebellion are smashed on their heads.

 Anotation Drago Glamuzina's novel Tri won the tportal award for the best novel in 2009 and was at the top of the Croatian charts that year, and after 15 years, a new edition of that acclaimed novel is being published. Although it has not been read that way before, Tri is undoubtedly a woman's novel; women are more expressive and dominant in the book, they are the ones who make the moves, move the boundaries, determine the dynamics, adjust the tonality.

This book is only a conditional travelogue, it is the result of the sharp eye, open mind and encyclopedic knowledge of Ivana Šojat, who takes us to famous locations, but tells what only she sees, hears and recognizes. And see the influences, the past and the people who used to pass through there. Three Empires is at the same time a historical handbook and a guide through the history of art, filled with unlimited imagination and a writer's nerve. Through cartoons, comics and animated films, the author connects art history, film history, anthropology and sociology. This book offers an intriguing insight into the relationship between man and his urban environment, analyzing how over time the media of popular culture changes and simultaneously shapes our view of ourselves and the world.
