Anotation	In the book, the author starts from an analysis of historical events and the culture of family memory in Dalmatia, or rather in its two parts. The book devotes much of its time to describing the phenomena and explaining and understanding the conditions of what happened in Dalmatia, Croatia and beyond in the first half of the twentieth century, especially during and after World War II. It is mostly focused on a meaningful treatment of the traumas and psychological burdens of the author's two families in connection with these events and the memories of their descendants in the Makarska Riviera and on the island of Korčula, but also in the USA, Canada and Australia.

Anotation	The rise of nationalism, racism and populism has given rise to a multitude of works on nationalism in Europe and in individual countries, and some of these works have been translated in our country. But there is not a single work in our country, by a Croatian author or translated, that would have a similar intention, structure and theoretical-empirical basis to that achieved in this book: a grounded critical reconstruction of Croatian nationalism as an ideology by isolating and analyzing the ideas of its two main intellectual representatives in the period between the two world wars (Ivo Pilar and Filip Lukas) and the ideological constructs of their contemporary successors.

Anotation	This extensive book in two volumes traces the development of journalism in Croatia from the first newspaper report in the Croatian language about the siege of Siget and the death of Nikola Šubić Zrinski in 1566 to the latest debates in 2025 about freedom of the press in Croatia. The author reveals the main phases of the development of journalism and, with many examples, describes the era of editorial journalism, the era of reportage journalism, all the way to the present phase of investigative journalism. The book clearly shows how newspapers have consistently changed the social and political situation in the country through their writing over the decades, regardless of the state structure and social order in which they operated.

Anotation	The book Politička povijest muške homoseksualnosti u socijalističkoj Jugoslaviji by historian, journalist, translator and activist Frank Dota is a significant step forward in the study of an apparently marginal phenomenon. With his book, based on diligent archival work and with rare intellectual and moral responsibility, Dota filled a gap that our historiography has insufficiently – or not at all – addressed.

Anotation	This is a story of vision, deception and political hazard, of industrial espionage, of scientists who believed in progress, but also of a regime ready to do anything to preserve sovereignty in a world torn between ideologies. From enthusiasm to chaos, from laboratories in Vinča (Belgrade), Zagreb and Ljubljana to closed sessions at the top of the state and backstage deals with Washington and Moscow, the author reveals a forgotten chapter in world nuclear history – and the story of a country that almost stepped into the club of nuclear powers, but gave up on those ambitions at the last moment.

The authors analyzed the connection between production and the local community, which also influenced the lifestyle of workers in the studied environments. It also presents in great detail and systematically the social and political transformation of the aforementioned shipyards from the "coal and steel" era to the present day.

Based on numerous sources and documents from domestic and foreign archives and libraries, as well as newspaper reports in the Wiener Zeitung newspaper, the festivities were reconstructed, as well as the appearance of the city in 1818, as well as the most important structures set up in public spaces, on Harmica Square and in the Upper Town.

Anotation	Miljenko Jergović revives that year and a world that no longer exists. Now that world is fixed as one of the possible worlds that we trust more than any history. Through the archaeology of memory, through the events of collective memory and those that are completely personal, the writer in these novelistic maneuvers, as 1983 is subtitled, shows and proves that the novel is hidden everywhere, but that only a few can write it in a way that we trust them.

Anotation	This is a novel about traumas, identities, alienation and life in the post-transition era, which is mostly a ferocious battlefield, sometimes also a "stacked pie" that makes us wonder - how do you approach the memory of people who are so much better and how to bridge the chasms of reality? Maja Ručević writes about all these difficult things with a light and expert hand, combining poetic passages and going very carefully into the psychology of the characters.

Anotation	The book Good Years is about everyday life in the suburbs and its customs, about fashion and travel, the ways of entertainment and the music we listened to, the films we watched, the food we ate. Anotation	The plot of Ivan Vidić's latest novel takes place in the late 1980s, in a time that is close to contemporary, and which we can already consider historical today. The main character, a naive young man from the provinces, chooses a college that is a career dead end right from the start. Decadence, political turmoil and the collapse of a regime overlap with the main character's intimate drama - sexual lust, uncontrolled passions and perverse love result in a disease with strange symptoms, but also in a mental disorder that threatens to destroy him.

Anotation	In creating this humorous techno-thriller, Franjo Janeš addresses a burning question: will we soon be able to distinguish between machine and man? How much longer will we need each other – both as people and as creators? And are we really completely helpless in all this? Janeš's novel is intended for all generations and, despite its dark motives, brings back a dose of optimism. "But don't read it," the cultivator tells you. If you listen to him, you won't find out who it is.

Anotation	Joshua's Tree is a very personal book of prose writings in which Lujanović, inspired by the holy city and its history, explores his own history – his family's, but also the lands of his ancestors, equally divided, fascinating and ravaged. Traveling through the Holy Land from Galilee to Nazareth, and walking through Jerusalem, Nebojša merges time, events and spaces – those from more than two thousand years ago to the recent ones, both in the Land of Israel and in Bosnia.

Anotation	The novel LNG Guantanamo is written in the first person of the female gender, and modern controversies are refracted in the main character Jana Petras; a woman unencumbered by social conventions, two opposing new global worlds that are being settled in Croatia, centers of power that are slipping out of control, the decadence of the new rich whose decades at the top passed too quickly and found them settling their life accounts and an emotional void that money cannot fill.

Anotation	Povratak Josipa Filipovića (The Return of Josip Filipović) is a novel about human destiny, about a man who may have destroyed his life for ideals, about people who, after a long absence, return to environments that are no longer what they were. A magnificent novel that shows that all great ideas are a deception, and those who believed in them are left with only small, ruined lives, which they can only mend with the love and support of those closest to them.

Anotation	In Stories from Three Cities, Vinka Šoljan publishes thirty-seven stories. These stories, set in three cities, Split (with Vranjic and Solin), Sarajevo, and Grand Haven in the USA, cover the period from the end of World War II to about fifteen years after the Homeland War. The authenticity of the places and characters, as well as historical events, influenced the author's style of creation – a documentary style in which even fictionalized depictions seem convincing and poignant, making them almost impossible to separate from the fictionalized ones.

These short prose pieces are the fruit of the author's reading of literature and in a way reveal the development of his literary interests. The texts are organized into seven microcycles with ten micro-essays/stories each from these always the same ten thematic frameworks: Ghosts, Travel, Sex, Hunger, Sport, Dreams, War, Art, Madness, Science. Note	Prijevod djela: Tesla oder Die Vollendung der Kreise.
ISBN	9789533588667 : EUR 26.30 US$ 31.60
Anotation	Although in Alida Bremer's novel Nikola Tesla is the key figure around whom all the life circles told here close, the main character is his admirer Anton Matijaca, a Dalmatian whose life path intertwined with Tesla's enough to grow into a story - a fiction in which any similarity to real people is intentional.

Ante Zlatko Stolica creates a drama from a seemingly ordinary situation, a genuine, existential one, in which we empathize with the hero, wander with him, drive, worry about where his car is, but even more so how he will solve his private, complicated love status.

Anotation	Vučja kuća i druge proze (Wolf's House and other prose) stories tell about Bosnia, about women and their destinies, about war crimes, about false heroes, but above all about girls and women who, as best they can, face their demons in the form of their loved ones. All stories, both short, almost micro-stories, and longer ones, are characterized by the clarity of language, precise and deadly metaphors, and lyricism that contrasts with the themes.

Anotation	Zadnji dan mira (The Last Day of Peace) by Ivana Sajko precisely and accurately delves into all the fears of modern man, into the anxious state that Western man has fallen into, in an era of pandemics, wars, climate crisis, instability, fake news and unverified sources. The Last Day of Peace is a novel about our time now, about the moment when we expect the end of the world. But perhaps there is still hope, because some young people still do not want to agree to the games of the powerful and decide to escape and disconnect themselves beyond the signal range.

Anotation	The three ridges of Everest - the west, south and north - are probably the three most famous mountain ridges on Earth, and it is along them that the most famous routes to the top of the world go. Stipe Božić is one of the rare people in the world who has climbed all three routes. In the book, Stipe Božić vividly and precisely reconstructs his greatest climbing successes, and also brings impressive, moving stories about the tragic events that forever marked his life.
